And today's financial tip:

If I buy TDC shares with my own money and then put it into a joint account at the Registry does the other person on the account have equal rights to those shares?

Yes they do. Regardless of who purchases the shares, once they are placed in a joint account they belong equally to all the holders of the account. If you wish to be the sole owner of those shares then you would have to place them in a different account, which would be a single account in your name.
