And today's financial tip:

If I am seeking assistance from a financial institution and wish to use my securities as collateral do I have to charge my entire holdings or only a part of my holdings?

No you do not have to charge your entire holdings if the value exceeds your loan amount. When charging your securities for a loan, the number of securities charged is based on the loan amount. If you hold securities in excess of the value of the loan amount only the equivalent number of securities will be charged.
